

Overshadowed

VISITORS to Hong Kong are taken aback by the spectacular architecture of the city. The mountainous landscape of the island, not so much. Hong Kong must have been similar to Hobart in its early years, a harbour city nestled in the foothills of steep mountainous terrain. It's easy to forget the scale of skyscrapers can rival mountains, and when that happens the mountains tend to fade away. Proposals for taller buildings in Hobart run the risk of obliterating the drama of our harbour city.

Mercury
28 Sept 2017

Richard McCure
Sandy Bay